Law And Justice At Olney High

Olney High School, in conjunction with Temple University Law School, has instituted a new program for students titled L.E.A.P. which stands for "law education and participation." In September Olney students and members of the legal community kicked off the new Law and Justice Center at Olney High. Conducting the sessions (rear left to right in photo) are David Vanderhoff, Temple Professor of Law; Dorian Segure, Assistant City Solicitor; David Trevaskis, L.E.A.P. Director; Walter Burwell, Olney Coordinator; Jan Jones, Olney teacher; Louis Lessick, Olney teacher, and Robin Chodak, Temple Law student. Kneeling in front are students Eliezer Ortiz, Heather Hestead, Gladys Carrion and Donnell Kennedy. The new program will teach law-related subjects such as the effects of drugs and the rights of juveniles.
